Eastern Health Court Case Continues January 24, 2008

It's day two of a court case, as lawyers for Eastern Health seek to prevent the public release of two reports at the Commission of Inquiry on Hormone Receptor Testing. The reports detail an external review of Eastern Health labs in 2005 and 2006. Eastern Health is also asking the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador to bar the commission from interviewing the two external reviewers. Liberal Leader Yvonne Jones says the court action should not be necessary and the premier should have stepped in. Jones says this will do nothing to restore public confidence in the health care system and could lead to more speculation that government is trying to hide information. She fears the true facts of the breast cancer testing problems will never see the light of day. The judicial inquiry was launched after it was discovered that hundreds of breast cancer patients received faulty test results to determine whether or not they could benefit from hormonal therapy.
