Teacher Allocations Questioned May 7, 2008

The teacher allocation issue is still raising its head. Education Minister Joan Burke says while no teachers will be lost from the education system, there may be some shifting from school to school. The opposition says they have been hearing from schools that will be losing teacher positions. Burke says the new formula bases teaching units on needs rather than numbers. Opposition Leader Yvonne Jones says a number of schools will be losing positions due to the new teacher allocation formula... and she says that will have adverse effects on students. Jones wants government to revisit the issue with schools that will potentially lose positions.
