Government Says No to Economic Summit December 11, 2008

The provincial government has voted down a private member's bill calling for an economic summit. Government brought down its fall financial statement this week, and it contains some good and some bad. While the surplus is double that which was forecast, things could get rough next year, perhaps even going into the red. Finance critic Kelvin Parsons says the decision to vote against the bill is short-sighted. He notes there are major problems in the economy impacting thousands of jobs. He says the ultimate goal of everyone should be looking at ways of getting through the financial crisis with as little damage as possible.
